My younger brother has recently started considering medical education outside his home country and wants to understand the different options available. During his research, he became interested in an Accredited caribbean medical school and has been comparing universities based on their academic programs, admission requirements, tuition fees, and clinical training opportunities. He is also trying to understand how accreditation affects eligibility for licensing examinations and future medical practice. Since choosing a university is a major decision, he wants to hear from people who have experience with international medical education. What important details should students verify before applying to a medical university abroad?
