For context — prediction markets have seriously taken off this year. Major Prediction Market platforms are now processing millions in trading volume across political, sports, crypto, and financial event categories. So naturally, a lot of businesses are moving away from off-the-shelf solutions and looking for custom-built platforms instead.

Here's a quick rundown of the companies that build Prediction Market Software that stood out to me:
1. Hivelance
Probably the most talked-about name right now. They focus heavily on modular architecture and fast deployment, which is great if you're trying to launch quickly without cutting corners on security. They cover everything from sports and crypto to political forecasting markets, and their multi-chain support is a genuine plus.
2. Plurance
If you need enterprise-grade infrastructure, Plurance is worth a serious look. They combine blockchain, decentralized oracles, and AI-driven analytics into one stack. What I really liked is that they bake compliance and security in from day one rather than bolting it on later.
3. Dappsfirm
These guys specialize in high-accuracy trading platforms with strong real-time oracle feeds and AI integration. Their UI seems more polished than most, which matters a lot for user retention. Good option if your audience includes non-technical users.
4. Bizvertex
Solid choice if you want a team that handles both platform development AND oracle integration end-to-end. They use modular design so you can scale across multiple chains as your project grows. Full lifecycle support from build to post-launch is also a big deal.
